TUNNEL VENTILATION.

Description of the Great Railway Subway Under the River Mersey.

Amply Lighted and Ventilated by Monster Fans.

All the New Haven Railroad Directors Under Bonds to the Coroner.

That there is no adequate basis for the deniby the New York Central Railroad officials of the feasibility of lighting and ventuating the Fourth Avenue Tunnel, has been demonstrated by the Evening World in the publication and explanation of the manner in which these objects are accomplished in the railway tunnel at

Further evidence that long tunnels can be ventilated and lighted effectively, when the authorities in charge desire to accomplish such ends, is found in the following description of the famous tunnel under the River Mersey, from Liverpool to Birkenhead, in England. In a paper on "The Mersey Railway," read before the Institution of Civil Engineers by Francis Cox, M. Inst. C. E., and printed in Engineering, a description of the methods of Tentilating the celebrated tunnel under the Mersey River is given. This tunnel was built with the object of effecting railway communication between Liverpool on the Lancasnire and Birkenhead on the

Cheshire shore of the River Mersey and the railway systems on each side of the river. The authorized railways of the company represent a total length of 5% miles of double line on the standard gauge of 4 feet 81/2 inches. The rallway was opened to public trame Fe-

The railway was opened to public traffic Fee.

1, 1886, a little over six years from the starting of the preliminary work.

When work on the tunnel was begun two shafts were sunk, one at Liverpool is feet in diameter and about 170 feet in depth, and one at Birkenhead, 17 feet 6 inches in diameter and of similar depth. The distance between quay walls on the two banks of the estuary of the Hiver Mersey, at the points between which the tunnel passed under, was 1,320 yards, the distance between the pumping shafts being 1,770 yards.

From each shaft a drainage heading was driven under the river towards the centre.

The drainage arr ngements resulted in the tunnel itself being remarkably dry. On the coccasion of the opening the tunnel was lighted by gas, and thousands of visitors walked through from end to end, without so much as seeing a drop of water, the only complaint being that it was slightly dusty.

The river tunnel is 25 feet in width, and,

The river tunnel is 26 feet in width, and, where in rock, is lined and inverted with brickwork in cement 2 f et 3 inches in thick ness. The minimum amount of cover between the extrados of the arch and the bed of the river is about 80 feet, and the depth of water above at high tide is 100 feet. The tunnel was carried out by means of heading driven through at all speed, and numerous break-ups, so that at one time work was proceeding from twenty-four faces, the whole being well drained. The fans were constructed on somewhat similar lines to those of the wellknown Guibal facs, excepting that an important alteration had been made in the shutter. "The faus were four in number, two of them 40 feet in dismeter by 12 feet wide, and two 30 feet in diameter by 10 feet wide, one of each size being erected at Liverpool and at Birkenhead respectively.

"For the purpose of ventilation, the innne! was divided into four sections, one of the above fans being allotted to each; but two fans at Liverpool and one fan at Snoreroad, Birkenhead, could at any moment, through the me dium of doors in the str-headings and passages, be made to do each other's duty as well as their own, and by the means any complete stoppage in the ventilation of the tunnel was

DIRECTOR MILLER IS DEAD.

All the Other New Haven Road Officials Have Given Bail.

Director George H. Miller, of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Reliway Company, has passed beyond the jurisdiction of the authorities charged with fixing the responsibility and the blame for the death of Heien T. Supple and the five other victims of the accident in the Fourth Avenue Tunnel, Feb. 90. Mr. Miller died at his home, 39 Fifth avenue, late last night. His illness had been previously reported at the Coroner's office.

All the other directors of the implicated road have appeared before Coroner Levy and have given conds in the penal sum of $25,000 each for appearance when wanted in any subsequent proceedings upon the verdict of the Coroner's jury which held them responsible for the six deaths referred to.

Secretary Bishop and several others of the road's officials were served by Coroner Levy with subponess to appear before the Grand Jury, whose function it is to take the next step in the investigation.

As soon as the minutes of the testimony at be inquest can be completed and transcribe by the Coroner's stenographer, the woole will e submitted to the District-Attorney, who will in turn present the evidence to the Grand The evidence will cover more than 1,000 typewritten pages.

The land tunnels are of similar dimensions internally to those of the river tunnel.

The Hamilton street and James street stations were excavated in the solid rock, and being near the river were necessarly at great depth. The rails at James street are 90 feet, and at Hamilton Square 100 feet below the level of the booking halls. The stations are 400 feet long by 50 feet wide by 32 feet high, arched with brickwork in cement, 2 feet 3 inches in thickness, and lined to a height of 12 feet above platform level, with white glazed bricks, the subways being lined in like manner.

In both stations there are three litts, each arranged to secommodate 100 passengers at a time. The time occupied on the vertical journey is about forts-five seconds, so that a train lond of 360 passengers can be brought from plotform level to the surface in one minute.

Mr. Cox says: "The ventilation of the tunnel and stations had been the subject of much consideration. The principle laid down was that fresh air should enter at the stations and "split" each way into the tunnel. By this means the atmosphere on the platform
